Afterlifers
In a Former W Va. Prison, Ghost-Hunters Want to See How Long-Dead Inmates Are Still Doing Time

By Melanie D.G. Kaplan
Special to The Washington Post

You whether dead inmates are still doing time.

I was curious to see if I could feel a connection with the past. I joined a group of ghost-hunters at the former West Virginia Penitentiary in Moundsville, W.Va., to explore the site and possibly detect any paranormal activities.

The prison opened in 1866 and closed in 1995. It is now open for tours and has become a popular destination for ghost hunters.

We were equipped with gadgets to detect paranormal activity, such as EMF meters, temperature detectors, and video cameras.

During our tour, we were shown the different parts of the prison, including the cells and the execution chamber.

As we walked through the prison, I could feel a sense of unease. The air seemed to be heavy, and I could hear whispers in the distance.

After the tour, we sat down to a haunted basement room to conduct our ghost-hunting session.

I was drawn to the pros: a three-hour tour and the chance to catch a glimpse of the supernatural. It was a lot of fun, but I was also a little scared.

The experience was both thrilling and terrifying. I would love to go back and see if I can detect any more paranormal activity.